

Answer five of the following questions, placing the number chosen before your response so I can see what choices you made.

You are to provide 4 paragraphs for each question. The paragraphs are to do the following

1. Answer the question asked in this paragraph.
2. Explore it to a deeper extent in this paragraph.
3. Do this again to a greater extent here.
4. Conclude with that was learned of value and importance.

The first part is worth up to 4 points with each subsequent point adding 1-2 points to your score with a possible 10 points offered.

Here are the questions you have to choose from

1. The chapter, "Why White Parents don't talk about Race" was written in 2009. BLM started in 2013. How is this chapter still relevant, or is it? What has changed?
2. In the chapter, "Can Self-Control be Taught?" a strange thing happens. Why? What for? An argument can be made that this phenomenon applies to us in our classes. How so?
3. There are 10 chapters in Nurture Shock. Which one applies to you most personally? How? Why?
4. Chapter 9. "How does exposure to different types of media influence children's behavior (ages 5-18), and what are the implications of parental conflict on children's social skills?"
5. Chapter 6. "How do friendships influence sibling interactions, and what proactive skills can parents teach to improve the quality of sibling relationships?"
6. Chapter 10. "How does your social class affect how you speak, your personal dictionary, vocabulary? Use Google. Define each term and show how the various application grow or decrease based upon the social analysis of that group as it inveighs meaning towards the proletariat owing to Marxist philosophy and the rise of technology."
7. "In Chapter Ten, it examine the "gimmicks" parents use to "jump-start" language skills. With that chapter in mind, what "gimmicks" has Mr. Schouten used this semester to improve your language skills and how have these worked?"
8. "In many ways what NS focuses on is what we have been doing as parents—and what we need to do better. With this in mind, are there things Mr. Schouten does in class that are different than ways you have learned before?"

9. "In chapter 9, "Plays well with Others", the authors ask after how we get along with those about us. It is a question of participation, or not. Summarize and review this chapter and then apply it to your thinking on why some of us get it and participate in class and why others don't."
